HOME OF MY CHILDHOOD. Oh, the home of my childhood is dear to me yet. Each lane and nook I can see, and the loved ones at home I can never forget, And I know they oft think of me. he orchard that stands at the forks of the road And the school-house just over the way, The old bridge that spans the river so broad,

I can see them in fancy to-day. The old barn that stood at the foot of the hill, Has long since fallen to the ground; And the spring-house down by the gurgling rill, Methinks I can still hear the sound; and the long shady lane with its carpet of green Where at twilight I've wandered alone; nd dear to my heart is that childhood's scene, Though in distant lands I may roam. The loved ones still gather round the wide open

Of a calm summer's twilight even, And talk of the absent-and their voices grow

As they speak of the loved ones in Heaven. And the old home is dear-how dear to my heart, With its old rustic porch, where the roses And oft in the still hours of night do I start,

And weep as I think of the dear old times. RED vs. BRINDLE.
